

Anthony's Travel

Schools Briefing sheet

There is an increased awareness of safety requirements on school trips following a number of high profile accidents over the last few years.

In order to minimise the possibility of things going wrong there is a legal and moral duty for schools to carry out risk assessments on all aspects of a school trip, ranging from hotels, activity centres, including facilities such as swimming pools, to the means of transport for getting there and back (and moving about if it is a multi-centre tour over a number of days).

The Department for Education and Skills (DfES) have issued a set of recommended guidelines for study support co-ordinators in schools and local education authorities (LEA's). Most LEAS' have appointed specific study support co-ordinators who will oversee school trip policies and offer advice and produce guidelines for schools and teachers.

Risk assessing transport and in particular coaches used for school trips will be an integral part of the process. The bus and coach industry trade body, The Confederation of Passenger Transport, (CPT) has drawn up a 'quality assurance standard' for coach operators who provide transport for school trips and tours that will be awarded to operators who meet a criteria agreed with the DfES and LEA's as being a minimum standard required.
